HOW THE MARCH WAS WRITTEN

The Way John Phillip Sousa Came to Write the March For His Famous Light Opera "El Captain"

When Sousa was writing "El Captain," one of the most successful comic operas of many years, he studiously avoided any semblance of march time in the music, presumably for the very reason that the public would naturally anticipate a march of some sort in a Sousa opera, and that he would demonstrate that he not only was not over-inclined to march time but really avoided it save when he saw fit to give to the field of band music a special contribution. Therefore the opera was born and christened devoid of march time. It has a more or less warlike atmosphere, and there was every opportunity for a real stirring martial ensemble climax, but Sousa used the chance with other treatment equally effective.

Time came for staging the opera and the producers were enthusiastic. At the first rehearsal one of them suggested that a certain martial scene should be sung in march time. The suggestion at once created an impression throughout the company as well as among the producers, and the latter set to find Sousa who was living at the Grenoble at the time.

"Look here, Mr. Sousa," said the spokesman, "the finale of the second act of 'El Captain' offers a magnificent opportunity for a grand march, and we have come to ask you to write one especially to fit the spot."

"Nonsense," replied Sousa, "that is the very thing I avoided doing."

"Ah, but you do wrong! You throw away a grand chance! Please do it!" For more than a week the famous composer was obstinate, but so much pressure was brought to bear that at last he consented to write a special march for the opera and not only that but he put a hand in the scene and that some has never failed to arouse an audience to high pitch. This is how one of Sousa's greatest marches came to be written.

"El Captain" will appear at the Traders Grand opera house Tuesday evening, September 27.
